Seasonable Rhymes.
From the Boston Courier.
HAPPIER THAN EVER.
Are lovely maidens all forlorn,
Grief stricken, broken hearted,
Because the August days are gone
And ice cream hints departed?
Oh! no, they're happier, gladder far
At home, in school, or cloister,
Because next month will have an R,
And bring the toothsome oyster.

CONTEMPLATION.
What matter though our Pilgrim feet
May never press the stranger's land,
Or wander lone where wild waves beat
Upon the ocean's pebbled strand?
For us expands a lovelier deep,
Where waters ever gentle sleep,
And sweetest echoes e'er respond
To Boston's beautiful frog pond.

A THESPIAN DITTY.
He went out to star
On a gay Pullman car,
But when he came back
He walked on the track.

SEPTEMBER COMES.
And now the hunter takes his gun
The fiddler to ramble over,
From morning dawn to set of sun,
In search of snipe and plover,
A gloomy, disappointed wight,
A bandaged hand caressing,
Returns he homeward in the night,
With several fingers missing.

Chief Geronimo's Career.

Gen. Howard has telegraphed from San Francisco to the War Department confirming the reported surrender of Geronimo to Gen. Miles.

"There has not been such a warrior as Geronimo since the days of Rob Roy," says Indian Commissioner Atkins. "He has subsisted on the roots of the desert and the serpents of the mountains for nearly two years. He has been his own commissary and chief of transportation; he has worn out an army, and has kept a vast region of country in terror. Part of the time he has been wounded and sick. His barbarous heroism and endurance are unsurpassed by anything in history."

"There are a good many points about this wonderful campaign that the public at large are not familiar with. The revolt that has just been brought to a close by this capture was started by a woman, the wife of Chief Mangus. She is a woman of great force of character, and strikingly intellectual for a squaw. She planned the escape and urged the band to desperate deeds. She was the Jean of Arc of the Apache race. The escape of Geronimo from Fort Apache took place on May 17, 1885. With him he took thirty-four bucks, eight boys, and ninety-one women. They travelled 120 miles before camping, and their pursuers were hot upon their tracks, but they didn't get in sight of the Indians. For hundreds of miles this chase was kept up until Geronimo was in the fastness of the mountains. Finally after a desperate campaign he was captured by Gen. Crook, but was only held one night, when he escaped again. A few days after this escape he returned into the fort with four bucks, and seizing a white woman, told her that if she did not tell him where his wife's tent was he would kill her. The woman pointed out the squaw's tent. Geronimo took his wife and was again at large, having accomplished one of the most daring and heroic deeds ever recorded. Now that he is captured after such a desperate chase he will undoubtedly be hurried east with all possible haste. Gen. Miles will take good care that he does not again escape. It would be a reflection upon the General that he will take good care not to have occur this desperado should again get at large."

At the Indian Office the history of this notorious Indian is being fully looked up. His name, spelled Eronem, first occurs in Agent Clum's report of the San Carlos agency in 1876. Mr. Clum writes at length in that year of the removal of the Chiricahua Apaches. In April a band of these Indians attacked Sulphur Springs station and killed two men, Messrs. Rogers and Spence. The same band attacked the ranches of the Rio San Pedro, killed one man and very badly wounded another. A company of cavalry went from Fort Bowie to punish these murderers. They pursued them sixty miles and had a fight. They killed no Indians and returned in May. Six of the Chiricahua Apaches were removed to San Carlos.

The name of the Chiricahua Indians had been a terror to Arizona and Sonora for many years previous to this. Many graves in Arizona marked the resting places of their victims and their raids for plunder and murder were continued up to the very day of their removal. The reason for their removal was that they could be managed better in the San Carlos Agency than in the mountain fastness.

At this time the tribe numbered 500 able warriors, well armed, brave, and experienced. They had defied the army, and had invariably been successful in all engagements with our troops. Gen. Kautz, who was then in command of the Department of Arizona, sent twelve companies of the Sixth Cavalry, two companies of Indian scouts and a company of Indian policemen to Apache Pass. The Indian scouts, had a small engagement with Chief Taza, who commanded the Chiricahua, but Taza and his tribe, when they understood what was desired, volunteered to go to San Carlos. About sixty Indians under Juh and Geronimo ran away into Sonora, where their home had formerly been. They soon tired of remaining in Mexico, however, for they received no rations there, and so came back into the United States.

On Sept. 2, 1877, three hundred Hot Springs and Chiricahua Indians suddenly deserted San Carlos. They were pursued and thirty of them captured. The remainder went into New Mexico and began to kill and pillage settlers. After a long campaign they were captured, but while being returned to San Carlos as usual about 100 made their escape to the mountains. A long and expensive campaign followed. The Indians were finally worn out, and came back only to all again escape, this time to the San Mateo Mountains.

It would be tedious to follow down all the campaigns from that time to the present. They are much alike all their details. The most serious campaign of all is the one just closed. The fact has been demonstrated to the entire satisfaction of both the war and Interior Departments that the Chiricahua Apaches cannot be kept with any safety in Arizona. They will be removed to some place of greater security further east.

The Sedgwick Calumny.

The attack on Mr. Arthur Sedgwick's character and reputation as a gentleman was about as blundering and mischievous as a bit of newspaper work as we can recall. It was that kind of libel that passes current the world over, that men roll on their tongues and bandy about as a jest, a peccadillo, ben trovato si non e vero. In the large circle of his own friends and acquaintances, where the indignation naturally rose above such an imputation, but now that the world at large is also convinced that the silly story had no foundation whatever in fact, the feeling of disgust and contempt becomes general that a respectable paper like the Times should have published a dispatch which bore on the face of it the sum of malice and improbability.

Of course the World, true to its vulgar and defamatory instinct, seized upon the cast-off lie of the Times as a special and delightful sensation, mixed it up with a pack of lies of its own particular brand, and served up the whole mess as a complete confirmation of the original lie.

There is no telling how the calumny might have been cooked last week had not the World discovered that it was printing stories in direct contradiction to facts in the possession of the State Department. Secretary Bayard denies that any such dispatch as that which the World attributed to Consul-General Forth had been received, but and notices that an indignant denial from Mr. Sedgwick is sufficient and conclusive.

It has been an exasperating and a shameful business all the way through. It leaves a sting where there has been no fault, and offers an insult where there can be no redress.

With bores like this to say by way of apology for its clumsy assault: "We find strong grounds for the hope that slight indiscretion at the worst will prove to have been the extent of his offending in the high opinion entertained of him by his many intimate friends in this city."

The World finds a ready easement for its alleged conscience by getting on the popular side of the fence in a single night, drops the affair with the impudent remark that "The whole matter seems to have been unnecessarily exaggerated and magnified," and sets to work with undiminished energy to humbug the public in some other way.

Neuralgic Rheumatism and Erysipelas.
About four years ago I was attacked with what the physicians pronounced neuralgic rheumatism accompanied with erysipelas. My appetite failed me entirely, and I had an intermitting pulse and very irregular pulsations of the heart. A terrible pain soon came into my chest and shoulders, and I became so helpless that I could attend to no business at all. The pains were moveable, and would sometimes pass from one part of my body to another. Finally the erysipelas broke out on my left hand and arm, and produced much swelling. I was for eighteen months afflicted in this way, and of course used a great many kinds of medicines, but nothing gave me relief. Friends finally persuaded me to try Swift's Specific. I noticed a decided improvement while taking the first bottle. I continued its use until I had taken about one dozen bottles, when I found myself sound and well again, with no sign of the disease left except a stiffness in my hand, a result of the erysipelas. While taking the medicine I gained on an average two pounds of flesh per day. I think S. S. S. a valuable medicine, and I frequently recommend it to my friends.
